

A selfless politician

I WRITE this letter with no disrespect to any political party.

Throughout my life, I have been a staunch supporter of truth, the freedom of speech and the dignity of all human beings.

The recent rubbishing of Amichand Rajbansi, however, has provoked me to write this response.

Rajbansi has always been an affable character, who has selflessly devoted himself to the indigent and silent majority in the apartheid ghettos of South Africa. Unlike many of his colleagues in other political parties, he chose not to live in the posh suburbs of our cities, but rather to live among the people and service their needs.

Despite the many setbacks he has experienced, he continues to serve and provide for the needy.

I wonder how many of his critics can boast the same?

Or, is it simply a case of sour grapes and envy?

B. SONI

Mountain Rise, Pietermaritzburg

The Witness. Tuesday 26 May 2009